Sparta elects new majority to council

SPARTA — The Township Council has a new majority, after Tuesday's runoff election.

Three newcomers who ran a coordinated campaign — John Schon, Molly Whilesmith and Gilbert Gibbs — won four-year terms on the five-seat council.

Schon (1,141 votes), Whilesmith (1,057) and Gibbs (1,024) narrowly beat challengers Robert Spetz (1,007) and Donald Ploetner II (981). Jesse Wolosky, a well-known activist, finished last at 693, according to unofficial results.

Schon, who was the top finisher in both the May election and Tuesday's runoff, said he was gratified by the results.

"I think that the voters spoke loud and clear," the councilman-elect said.

Whilesmith, who will be the first woman on the council since 2006, thanked her family and her campaign manager. She said she was going to enjoy the win, just for a short while.

"I'm going to relax for a couple hours, and then I'll be getting back to work," she said.

Gibbs, too, said he was happy with the results.

All three congratulated and thanked one another and their supporters.

Vernon suit adds charges, defendants

Councilman calls colleagues puppets of local GOP group

By PHILLIP MOLNAR

VERNON — Councilman Richard Carson's racketeering lawsuit alleging he was intimidated and harassed by a select group of local Republicans surprised many in Vernon and in the county.

But according to an amended complaint filed last week in federal court, it appears that Carson's lawyers, Kevin Kelly and Dan Perez, were holding back some of their most explosive allegations.

The complaint adds four new defendants, including Vernon's current deputy mayor, provides further alleged evidence bolstering Carson's case, and asserts the current, and many former, elected Vernon councils are puppets of the Vernon Republican Committee.

It was only eight months ago that Carson filed his lawsuit, claiming he had been pressured to sign four resignation letters by Vernon Police Officer David Hering, armed and in uniform, on Nov. 8, 2008, in a municipal parking lot.

Hering was found guilty of "conduct unbecoming a public employee" by the Vernon

Police Department, but later had the guilty finding erased by the current Vernon Township Council.

But the lawsuit went far beyond this one incident; Carson declared he had been harassed for months by Vernon Republican Committee, or VRC, member Andrea "Bunny" Cocula, Mayor Austin Carew, and Officer Hering, through phone hang ups, threats of violence and intimidation.

Carew and Cocula have both denied the charges. "I found the (amended) complaint as preposterous as the first one," Carew said.

But according to the new complaint, there were more conspirators — and the level of harassment was more extensive — than first thought by individuals familiar with the case.

ANDREA "BUNNY" COCULA

Sitting in the rear of the municipal meeting room at nearly every Vernon Council meeting is the 69-year-old, 5-foot-4-inch tall grandmother. Cocula, with blonde hair and glasses, can be seen at her usual spot behind the man filming the meetings for basic cable.

Fast-moving house fire leaves shell in Hampton

HAMPTON — Plumes of black smoke could be seen miles away from a house fire on Tuesday. By late afternoon, all that remained of the two-story home on Morris Turnpike were charred support beams, a blackened stone chimney and a sturdy foundation.

"There was no way we were going in," Branchville firefighter Ashley Pelt said. "By the time we got here, the house was already fully involved."

The Branchville Fire Department first received word of a possible fire at 12:16 p.m. The Frankford Fire Department was first to the scene with assistance from state police and seven other Sussex County fire departments.

No one was in the house, located at the border of Frankford and Hampton, when the fire started. No injuries were reported. However, a household pet may have perished.

The fast-moving fire was under control by 2 p.m., but little of the house was salvaged. Fire officials could not determine when the fire would be completely extinguished.

Sussex County Fire Marshal Joe Inga said that since no water source was nearby, extensive backup and tankers were needed to supply water to extinguish the fire. Inga also was concerned about the torrid weather conditions. To prevent heat exhaustion, firefighters worked to suppress the flames by rotating off duty every 20 minutes.

Branchville Fire Chief Keith

Whitehead said this was the largest fire he's fought this spring and the largest he's witnessed in two years.

Once the fire was controlled, Whitehead said, the only hazard left was the house's propane tank, which was kept cool during the blaze, then unhinged and removed.

Neighbor Margie Havens speculated that homeowner Elizabeth Jackson was at work in the southern part of the state while her two sons were in day care when the fire broke out.

State police will investigate the blaze to determine the cause.

"There's nothing left," Havens said. "My heart goes out to Liz."

Obama: 'Reckless' BP will pay for cleanup

By JENNIFER LOVEN

WASHINGTON — Vowing to "make BP pay," President Barack Obama accused the oil giant of "recklessness" in his first address to the nation from the Oval Office Tuesday night, eight weeks to the day after the catastrophic oil spill began destroying waterways, wildlife and a prized Gulf Coast way of life.

"We will fight this spill with everything we've got for as long it takes," declared Obama, whose own presidency has been stumbling because of the gushing oil. A new Associated Press-GFK poll even indicates as many Americans disapprove of his handling of the crisis — 52 percent — as felt that way about President George W. Bush's handling of the Katrina aftermath.

Obama offered no immediate remedies for a frustrated nation. Rather he announced he had asked former Mississippi Gov. Ray Mabus to develop a long-term Gulf Coast Restoration Plan — to be funded by BP PLC — in concert with local states, communities, fishermen, conservationists and residents "as soon as possible."

He did not detail what this effort — he called it a "battle plan" — should include or how much it might cost, a price sure to be in the billions of dollars. Whatever the bottom line, he declared to his prime-time television audience, "We will make BP pay."

That's not certain, however. In declaring that BP won't control the compensation fund for Gulf recovery, Obama failed to mention that the government won't control it, either. The president meets BP executives in a White House showdown today.

Fifty-seven days into the crisis, oil continues to gush from the broken wellhead, millions of gallons a day, and Obama has been powerless to stem the leak. The sad episode has raised doubts about his leadership and his administration's response to what Obama has called the nation's worst environmental disaster.

He spoke from the Oval Office while seated at the storied Resolute desk, a bank of family photos and an American flag filling the backdrop. A president sometimes criticized as lacking emotion, Obama talked in a calm tone, no sign of the anger he showed earlier in the week concerning the spill.

In one specific action, Obama announced former Justice Department inspector general Michael Bromwich as his choice for the new head of the agency that regulates the oil industry. Obama said Bromwich's job at the helm of the federal
