Elizabeth Vernon, of Andover Borough, holds her daughter Baia, 5 months, while filling water jugs in Stokes State Forest. She wants more No Idling Zone signs put up, especially in Stokes State Forest near the spring water tap, where people come for water and line up, leaving their cars idling while waiting for their turn.

from Epidemiology magazine, the American Journal of Respiratory and Critical Care Medicine, Environmental Health Perspectives journal, the American Journal of Public Health and many others.

The Environmental Defense Fund found that children were more vulnerable than adults to traffic-related air pollution, causing asthma, respiratory consequences and stunted lung development; vehicle emissions could cause adverse reproductive outcomes such as stunted fetal development, low birth weight and premature birth; and diesel emissions can trigger asthma attacks in children and adults.

One report from the American Journal of Epidemiology found that the mix of emissions from idling vehicles caused lower IQ levels in Boston children who were exposed to high levels.

Vernon received two free “No Idling” signs from the DEP, but trying to get them put up in Stokes State Forest is another problem. Vernon said park manager Paul Stern refused to put up one of the signs, and the one he will put up is not close enough to the well.

The current sign is about 20 feet from where people collect their water at the popular water source, but Vernon is concerned that the people waiting to get their water won't see it.

“There needs to be a sign right where they get the water,” Vernon said.

Stern said he planned to replace the current “No Idling” sign with one of the signs Vernon got from the DEP, but referred comment on a second sign to the DEP's press office.

DEP Spokesperson Larry Hajna said it “appears people are complying with the one sign” and a second sign would be unnecessary.

“We don't want an overabundance of signs,” Hajna said.

Hajna added that the DEP was very appreciative of Vernon's efforts.

Currently, there is a “No Hunting or Trapping” sign on a tree next to the well. Also, when the New Jersey Herald visited the well last week, two cars (in addition to the utility truck) stopped and idled while Vernon filled up her bottles.

“I don't understand why there is so much resistance,” Vernon said, of the DEP.

Vernon said despite getting only one sign in Stokes State Forest, she will not stop her efforts to stop idling in the park, and New Jersey as a whole.

“This is just round one,” Vernon said. “I'm not going anywhere.”

Shooting

fifth victim is a 20-year-old man from New York City who is not a student.

The university's interim president, Gabriel Esteban, said Moore was a sophomore honors student from Disputanta, Va., majoring in psychology. During a news conference on campus, Esteban, who appeared to be on the verge of tears, said he had been with the students' families in the hospital all day.

“It's a call no parent wants to get,” he said.

Police were not releasing the other victims' names because the shooter remains at-large, Di Elmo said.

A student who said she attended the party and had classes with Moore told The Associated Press that there was a fight after a man was kicked out because he didn't want to pay the cover charge.

The woman did not give her name, citing fears for her safety because the shooter was still at large.

The student said the man then came back and began firing his gun.

“This girl was here to go to school and nothing else, and she just wanted to go have fun, and we all were having fun 30 seconds before that happened,” the student said of the shootings.

Another partygoer told The Star-Ledger of Newark that he was in the kitchen and heard people shouting in the living room when a shot rang out. More shots were fired as the panicked crowd stampeded toward the back of the house to try to escape, the man said. He also declined to give his full name to the newspaper out of fear for his safety.

The apartment is located at 564 South Clinton St. in East Orange, less than a mile from the university. Well-kept row homes line the street, but a main cross street leads to a tougher part of town.

Police cruisers and orange cones blocked traffic on the street where the shootings happened. An electronic highway sign propped up down the street offered a reward for information and gave a tip line phone number.

Mary Williams, a 59-year-old retiree who lives next door, said she was in bed when she heard the gunshots, and she called 9-1-1.

“I seen people scattering, climbing out the window, trying to get out the front door, back windows, a lot of hollering and screaming,” Williams said in a telephone interview.

A number of people who fled the house sought refuge at a White Castle restaurant down the street, said Vanie Estime, an employee there.

“I was doing the drive-in and I heard screaming through my headset,” she told the AP.

The university planned a community prayer service Saturday at 9 p.m. to “support the Seton Hall students and their families affected by this morning's shooting in East Orange,” according to a notice posted on the school's website.

Additionally, the school's Department of Public Safety urged students to “travel in groups when walking off campus.”

Student Connor McCormick, of Colchester, Vt., said the school sends campuswide e-mails whenever a mugging occurs.

“We probably get one a week,” said McCormick, 19, adding that when students go off campus, “You don't walk alone.”

Seton Hall, a private Catholic university in nearby South Orange, about 15 miles west of New York City, enrolls about 10,000 students.

Henry reported from South Orange. Associated Press writer Tom McElroy in New York City contributed to this report.
